Excerpt from North Carolina Medical Journal, Vol. 19: January, 1887 In certain cases the principles of surgery admit of no choice. For instance, if we are to Operate for malignant disease, we must go far above its seat, so as to leave behind no diseased elements. Or, again, in certain cases of severe injury, as in railroad accidents, where there has been crushing force and great tearing and dragging of the tegu mentary and other soft tissues, experience proves that if the opera tion is done near to the injury, although the skin looks sound, the stump will slowly mortify. The vitality of the parts are affected higher up than would be supposed because of the injury to the nutrient vessels, and hence such parts slough at a later period. Never forget this important fact, for it will save you from having to do many secondary Operations I will shortly explain to you how the nature of the diseased condition before us will necessitate my operating well above the joints.
